

Four Finalists 2014

The Cayle Chernin Memorial Fund is extremely pleased to announce the finalists for the 2014 Cayle Chernin Award. Because of the exceptional quality of the 2014 submissions the Committee has chosen four finalists instead of the usual three. The Cayle will be presented on May 22, 2014 at the Carlton Cinema following a cocktail party and screening of Goin' Down the Road.

The four finalists are:

Fenulla Jiwani for her short film 'Nobody': the story of a North American Muslim woman Mahina who in route to her engagement party encounters a homeless woman that changes her life.

Kimberly-Sue Murray for her Web Series "WEREWOMAN": Patrick, your typical guy's guy, finds himself the unlikely candidate living in a women's commune. One night Patrick experiences a series of strange symptoms: bleeding, cramps, and sensitive pecks. What the....?

Kristina Esposito for her short film 'Captive Love': For years Sonia has been writing letters to Darren, a man in jail for accessory to kidnapping. Sonia was one of the hostages. Now, upon Darren's release, Sonia makes the decision to have dinner with him....

Nicole St. Martin for her feature "Monday Night Shakespeare": explores the entangled relationships amidst a diverse community of actors who gather weekly to perform rehearsed Shakespearian scenes.

We thank all the applicants for their hard work and vision and hope to see you all at the Cayle Chernin Award presentation on Thursday May 22, 2014 at the Carlton Cinemas beginning with a cocktail party at 6 pm, a screening of the Canadian classic film Goin' Down the Road with cast Jayne Eastwood, Doug McGrath and director Don Shebib, culminating in the award reception and presentation.